SMU ASIAN STUDIES SYMPOSIUM

The Asian Studies Symposium builds awareness and appreciation of Asian cultural, political and economic issues among the student body and faculty at SMU, as well as reaching individuals and corporations in the greater Dallas metroplex. The symposium offers topics with many educational correlatives in courses, such as International Relations, Comparative Politics, and Eastern Religions. Organized by the John G. Tower Center for Political Studies at SMU, the 2010 Symposium presents The China-Japan-US Triangle: Economic and Security Dimensions.

THE JOHN G. TOWER CENTER FOR POLITICAL STUDIES

Since 1992, the John Goodwin Tower Center for Political Studies has sought to bridge the gap between the world of ideas, scholarship and teaching and the real-world practice of politics and public policy. The Center carries out the legacy of the late U.S. Senator and SMU alumnus John Tower '53, who dedicated his life to understanding the needs and challenges of a world that has become a global village. This commitment to critical study is reflected in the Tower Center's focus on undergraduate education, a unique approach among the many centers for political studies that exist in universities today. The Tower Center specializes in the study of national security, political economy and American political development. The work of the Center has contributed to the education and inspiration of a new generation of thoughtful leaders who embody John Tower's passion for service and scholarship.
